The horn sounded signaling the end of the heat. It was a silvery mid-afternoon, the dull sunshine danced on the lightly chopped ocean surface as the competitors approached the shore. Family, team members and well-wishers filtered down to the water's edge, eagerly awaiting to congratulate their prospective athletes on surfing in the finals of the Mexican national championships. Lucas stood on shore under a barrage of high-fives and back-pats. He struggled out of his oversized jersey amidst the chaos. He kept his gaze fixed on the horizon and spotted a clean right hander going un-ridden. For most folks, these were anxious moments, everyone wanted to know how the judges were going to rule. Lucas kept his eyes on the ocean, he wrapped his leash around his ankle and jumped back in the water to go surf. The beach announcer started to read off the results, "y en primer lugar, Lucas Cassity." The Baja Sur surf team erupted in cheers, jumping up and down in excitement. One of the team members waded out into the water to yell at Lucas as he was still making his way out to the lineup. "You won Lucas, you won." Lucas looked back over his shoulder and waved his hand in the air. After surfing a while longer, the visibly exhausted Lucas dragged his tiny frame up to the competitors' area, "Lucas, didn't you hear, you won!" Looking down and reaching for his towel with his dripping wet hand, he replied "I heard, I'm hungry, let's go eat." At eight-years-old, Lucas became the national champion for 2017 of the fourteen-and-under division.

Nine-year-old Lucas Enrique Senkbeil Cassity was born in La Paz, Baja California Sur, Mexico and raised in the small town of Todos Santos, one hour south of La Paz on the Pacific coast. He stands a solid five feet tall, has electric blue eyes and a thick clump of shoulder length white-blonde hair. In person, he is sometimes shy yet always La corneta sonó anunciando el final del calor. Era una media tarde plateada, el brillo del sol bailaba sobre la superficie del océano ligeramente picada cuando los competidores se acercaban a la orilla. Familiares, miembros del equipo y simpatizantes se filtraron hasta la orilla del agua, esperando ansiosamente felicitar a sus futuros atletas por surfear en las finales de los campeonatos nacionales de México. Lucas se quedó en la orilla bajo un bombardeo de "chocalas" y palmadas. Batalló para salir de su enorme camiseta en medio del caos. Mantuvo su mirada fija en el horizonte y vio una derecha limpia que nadie agarraba. Para la mayoría de la gente, estos fueron momentos de ansiedad, todos querían saber cómo iban a calificar los jueces. Lucas mantuvo sus ojos fijos en el océano, amarró su correa alrededor de su tobillo y saltó en el agua para ir a surfear. El anunciador de la playa comenzó a leer los resultados, "y, en primer lugar, Lucas Cassity." El equipo de surf de Baja Sur estalló en aplausos y porras, saltando de emoción. Uno de los miembros del equipo se metió en el agua para gritarle a Lucas que todavía estaba saliendo a la alineación. "Ganaste Lucas, ganaste." Lucas miró por encima del hombro y agitó la mano en el aire. Después de surfear un poco más, Lucas visiblemente agotado arrastró su pequeño cuerpo hasta el área de los competidores, "¡Lucas, ¿no escuchaste?, ganaste!" Mirando hacia abajo y alcanzando su toalla con su mano mojada y goteando, él respondió, "Oye, tengo hambre, vamos a comer." A los ocho años, Lucas se convirtió en el campeón nacional 2017 de los catorce y menores.

Lucas Enrique Senkbeil Cassity, de nueve años, nació en La Paz, Baja California Sur, México, y creció en la pequeña ciudad de Todos Santos, a una hora al sur de La Paz, en la costa del Pacífico. Mide cinco pies (1.52cm), tiene ojos LUCAS continúa en página 20 engaging and polite. Disarmingly charming and quick to smile, he possesses a maturity beyond his years. He rarely sports anything other than a surf t-shirt, surf shorts and Vans skate shoes, and is always quick to tell you about his last surf session. He is physically overdeveloped, typically standing half a head higher than anybody in his age division and typically outweighs them by twenty pounds.

Lucas was practically born in the ocean; his mom Laura was body surfing at Cerritos beach just hours before she was to give birth to him. Times were tight in the early years; Laura taught part time at a local private school and his dad played music and tried to sell paintings. Although there wasn't much money, this lifestyle afforded lots of free time to play at the beach. By the time Lucas was two and a half he was standing up on little whitewashes by himself.

In the late summer of 2014, our family went to visit the grandparents in San Juan Capistrano, CA and catch the professional surf contest in San Clemente—where many of Lucas's surf heroes were competing. This turned out to be a pivotal time for Lucas and family. On the morning of September 14th, Hurricane Odile, the massive category four storm, plowed over Baja California Sur. Our unfinished house that we had managed to scrape together didn't stand a chance in the behemoth; it was almost entirely destroyed. With no home to go back to, I went to work to save money to re-build the home. Lucas, Eliana (Lucas's little sister) and Laura spent every day of the next six weeks at a little wave called Doheny State Beach, California, to pass the time. Doheny is a perfect little right and left hander. It is probably the best wave in the world to learn how to move your surfboard, and that's what Lucas learned how to do—a silver lining if there ever was one.

Shark Tales Cuentos de Tiburones

by / por Bryan Jáuregui

This is the tale of two shark habitats. In one, it is the best of times and the age of wisdom. Sharks roam wild and free in protected waters, and glory in the joys of being an apex predator bringing balance to the ecosystem. In the other, it is the worst of times and the age of foolishness. The few remaining sharks huddle like refugees, easily spooked and fearful with the knowledge that a predator with little thought for the ecosystem is now at the top of the food chain. The first, as you might expect, is in a wild area in the Pacific Ocean, south of the Baja peninsula and away from the habitations of man. The latter, you might be surprised to learn, is in the Gulf of California, the Sea of Cortés. It is in Jacques Cousteau's "Aquarium of the World."

Esta es la historia de dos hábitats de tiburones. Uno de ellos se desarrolla en el mejor de los tiempos, en la era de la sabiduría. Allí los tiburones deambulan libres y salvajes en aguas protegidas, orgullosos de ser un depredador tope responsable del equilibrio en el ecosistema. En el otro, es el peor de los tiempos, la era de la necedad. Los pocos tiburones que quedan se acurrucan cual refugiados, asustados y temerosos con el conocimiento de que un depredador con poca reflexión sobre el ecosistema se encuentra ahora en la cima de la cadena alimenticia. El primero, como es de esperar, se encuentra al sur de la península de Baja California en un área virgen, lejos de las zonas habitadas por el hombre. El segundo, tal vez te sorprenda saber, está en el Golfo de California. El "Acuario del Mundo" según Jacques Cousteau.

Of course, in Jacques Cousteau's day it was a very different story, but one that divers and others could share until recently. "It was 1995 and I was at El Bajo seamount, near Isla Espíritu Santo in the Gulf of California," says Dr. James Ketchum, co-founder of Pelagios Kakunjá, an NGO based in La Paz dedicated to studying and protecting sharks. "I was getting ready to get in the water to go scuba diving with the hammerhead sharks, when the skiff driver yanked me back. A tuna boat from Ensenada dropped its huge net around the whole seamount at just that moment. If I had been inside, I would have been trapped and killed along with everything else. I was saved, but in the next few years almost all the sharks in the Gulf of California were gone. When I went in 2011, there were no sharks at all. None at El Bajo, none at Las Animas, none at Isla Cerralvo—seamounts and islands where they had previously congregated in the hundreds. On one trip I did manage to see five sharks at El Bajo, but they were so afraid it broke my heart."

Dr. Felipe Galván-Magaña, a professor of marine biology at CICIMAR, Ketchum's advisor for his master's thesis, and one of the leading shark researchers in the Gulf of California, remembers how it used to be. "In 1978 and 1979 when I was an undergraduate at CICIMAR in La Paz, I worked with Dr. Peter Klimley, AKA Dr. Hammerhead, studying the behavior and feeding habits of hammerheads. We would go out to El Bajo seamount and there would be hundreds of sharks swimming all around us. You could put out your hand and brush dozens in a moment. But then, in the mid 1990s, the fishermen came from Chiapas and put nets across the entire upper portion of the Gulf of California. That was the end of the sharks in the Gulf. I took a trip to visit fishing camps all along the gulf coast of the Baja peninsula, and found that no one was catching sharks. No one was even seeing sharks. They were gone. In the year 2000, there was a meeting in La Paz in which it was announced that there were no more hammerheads at El Bajo, a site they had been gathering at for as long as anyone can remember."

It's a completely different story to the south in the Revillagigedo Archipelago, also known as the Socorro Islands, about 300 miles southwest of the Baja Peninsula. "It is the last refuge for sharks in the Mexican Pacific" says Ketchum. "Distance is protection." In 2010 Ketchum, then a doctoral student at UC Davis in Peter Klimley's lab, analyzed the data gathered by Klimley and his colleague Mauricio Hoyos-Padilla on a National Geographic shark tagging expedition in the Revillagigedos. The sharks were tagged with acoustic transmitters, a magnificent athletic feat as sharks do not like the bubbles of scuba gear so can therefore be tagged only by free divers who must get within two to three feet of the sharks to anchor the transmitters in the meaty area just behind the dorsal fin. The transmitters allowed Ketchum and other researchers to analyze the expedition's telemetry data and better understand the movements of the sharks. Inspired by their findings, Ketchum and Hoyos-Padilla applied for and won a grant from the World Wildlife Fund (WWF) to form Pelagios Kakunjá and continue the shark-tagging program. (Kakunjá means "to protect" in the language of the now-

Claro que, en la época de Jacques Cousteau, la historia era muy diferente, pero era una historia que buceadores y otros podían compartir hasta hace poco tiempo. "En 1995 yo estaba en El Bajo, cerca de Isla Espíritu Santo en el Golfo de California," dice el Dr. James Ketchum, cofundador de Pelagios Kakunjá, una ONG con sede en La Paz dedicada al estudio y protección de los tiburones. "Me estaba preparando para meterme al agua para bucear con los tiburones martillo, cuando el conductor de la embarcación me hizo detenerme. En ese preciso momento, un barco atunero de Ensenada dejó caer su enorme red alrededor de todo el monte submarino. Si hubiese estado en el agua, habría sido atrapado y asesinado junto con todo lo demás. Me salvé, pero en los años siguientes, casi todos los tiburones en el Golfo de California desaparecieron. Cuando fui en 2011, no había tiburones en absoluto. Ninguno en El Bajo, ninguno en Las Animas, ninguno en Isla Cerralvo. Montañas submarinas e islas donde previamente se habían congregado de a cientos, se veían vacías. En un viaje logré ver cinco tiburones en El Bajo, pero tenían tanto miedo, que me rompió el corazón."

El Dr. Felipe Galván-Magaña, un profesor de biología marina en el CICIMAR, asesor de Ketchum para su tesis de maestría, y uno de los principales investigadores de tiburones en el Golfo de California, recuerda cómo solía ser. "En 1978 y 1979, cuando estudiaba en el CICIMAR en La Paz, trabajé con el Dr. Peter Klimley, también conocido como el Dr. Tiburón Martillo, estudiando el comportamiento y los hábitos alimenticios de los tiburones martillo. Ibamos al Bajo y veíamos cientos de tiburones nadando a nuestro alrededor. Uno hubiese podido tocar a docenas de ellos con solo extender la mano. Pero luego, a mediados de la década de los 90, los pescadores vinieron de Chiapas y pusieron redes en toda la porción superior del Golfo de California. Ese fue el fin de los tiburones en el Golfo. extinct Guaycura Indians of the southern Baja peninsula, and Pelagios means life of the open ocean.)

Pelagios Kakunjá initially focused on three shark tagging projects: the great whites at Isla Guadalupe off the northern coast of the Baja peninsula, hammerheads in the Sea of Cortés, and hammerheads in the Revillagigedo Archipelago. "But there were not enough hammerheads in the Sea of Cortés to build a project around, so we decided to focus all of our hammerhead energy on the Revillagigedos" notes Ketchum.

The Revillagigedo Archipelago is comprised of four volcanic islands, and under its original biosphere reserve designation the six nautical miles around each island was protected. "They were like donuts" observes Ketchum, "each cut off from the other. Our research showed the vast connectivity of all the waters of the archipelago for sharks. The sharks were not just resting in the six nautical miles around each island, they were traveling throughout the entire area. The biosphere reserve status did nothing to protect the sharks as the fishermen could simply go between the islands to hunt them."

Working with CONANP, the Mexican Commission of Natural Protected Areas, and other Mexican NGOs and academic institutions, Pelagios Kakunjá put together the documentation to have the Revillagigedos designated as a UNESCO World Heritage site. Ketchum's design for making the archipelago a marine-protected area that took the area's connectivity into account was included in the UNESCO documentation. "UNESCO could see that the six nautical mile protection area was inadequate, so one of their requirements was to increase the protected area to 12 nautical miles. We got this done and the area was designated a UNESCO World Heritage Site in 2016. This was a wonderful thing for the Revillagigedos, but the protected area still wasn't enough to account for the connectivity of the islands and the swim patterns of the sharks. The model I created based on my PhD thesis indicated that the hammerhead sharks were using a 40 nautical mile home range around each island in the Eastern Pacific, and that is what we needed to expand the 'no take' or no fishing area to adequately protect the sharks."

Ketchum and Hoyos-Padilla presented the new expansion idea for the Revillagigedos at a scientific conference in 2014 where it was very well received. "I subsequently met someone from the Pew Charitable Trusts who was interested in my work and agreed to help get the protected area expanded and upgraded from a biosphere reserve to a national marine park. The Pew folks connected us with a group of lawyers in Mexico City, Beta Diversidad, that carried out the policy work needed to push this initiative with the Mexican government. In the summer of 2017, we worked with other scientists to compile an enormous cache of documentation which was submitted to the government. We must have been convincing, because SHARKS continued on page 27

Anne Hebebrand Recent Work

When Looking is Seeing

by Pamela Ambrose

Art is not what you see, but what you make others see.

The above quote attributed to the French impressionist Edgar Degas is most apt when discussing the new paintings of Anne Hebebrand. This selection of work necessitates no quick walk by for the viewer but demands on our part a studied consideration in which the artist's skill and mastery of paint application, the layered compositions, and subtle references are slowly, and joyously revealed when we take some time with each individual painting. Her work requires that we encounter each painting individually and then go back and look at all the paintings and consider them as a whole. There is much to discover and much to add with our own interpretations.

The lyricism in Anne Hebebrand's work can have us thinking about music with associations of color and line in the manner of Paul Klee's paintings and drawings. Her checkerboard and striped blocks of color contrasted with her rhythmic loopy lines start you humming as the artist establishes counterpoint in each individual work. Taking as an example one of the her more complicated works, Swept Away, 2018, (oil and cold wax on paper), Anne uses intense blues, red and yellow lines, stripes, and checks overlaid onto a deep ground of various tints of gray. Note that the title of the painting is also the title of a film by the Italian film director, Lina Wertmüller, and the title's clue of being swept away is reflected in the upper right of the canvas as suggested by a pair of upside-down catenary arches (or droopy breasts connected to a foam of tangled hair). At the bottom right, a line (possibly a fishing line?) tangles out from the corner. The upper half of the canvas is punctuated by a small line of yellow blocks reminiscent of fishing-net floats. All in all, we are looking at the sea and its ever-changing nature.

The artist spends half of the year in Todos Santos. This rugged part of Mexico situated between the Sea of Cortez and the Pacific Ocean has certainly influenced her palette. You often hear painters and photographers talk about the quality of light, and Todos Santos can be inspiring with its constant changing of the sea and sky at sunrise, sunset, or full sun of the day. Sometimes moody and atmospheric or brilliant with the full, golden light of southern Baja, it is almost impossible not to have that beauty permeate your work or to be immune to the spectacular surroundings. However, the artist in the painting Swept Away, 2018, shows restraint in making direct allusions to the landscape and atmosphere. In contrast, but with a similar reference to the sea, I'll Come Following You, 2018 (oil and cold wax on paper), the composition is horizontally divided with the lower half a bluish white foam with the top half a brilliant blue encroaching onto as though onto the sand. Small, unanchored dark lines and tendrils float amid the blue. This painting gives us much to think about with its anchoring, solid shape of a yellow parallelogram in an otherwise ethereal composition.

Here is a prolific artist who works on multiple paintings during one creative period letting one painting inform another. "I have to let a painting sit for a while and I find it helpful to put them away and kind of forget about them. This is also crucial in not 'overworking' any given composition. After a duration I can go back with a more objective eye and assess what works and what does not, even sometimes losing parts of a painting I like a lot. Making art should include the willingness to not get attached to the preciousness of certain passages but be willing to lose them. Risk-taking is always critical in painting. If something doesn't work, be bold, it always leads to a new place!"

Anne has the much sought-after mastery of applying paint that gives a supreme credibility and richness to her paintings. Each canvas, if divided into small sections, would yield perfectly painted compositions by themselves, rich with minute details. She understands the European tradition of being well-trained academically that then sets you free with the confidence and integrity to explore and experiment. Born into three generations of German artists and designers, she grew up going to museums in Europe before coming to the United States to later study at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts. There is, indeed, something European about her work, especially her understanding of color. There is a palpable feel of surface tension created by the overlaying of colors. She accomplishes this through a variety of brushy or smoothly painted patches of opaque and translucent overlays. Working primarily within a square format, a discipline which limits her (and the viewer) as to what can be seen and not seen, therefore negating references to the natural world of horizontal and vertical views. Yet, we sense there is much, much more

Prepárese Para la Décima Gira Anual de los Estudios Abiertos de Todos Santos

por Jamie Sechrist
traducido por Ivonne Benítez

8 AL 10 DE FEBRERO DE 2019

La Sociedad Palapa se complace en anunciar la 10^a visita anual a todos los estudios abiertos de Todos Santos. Cada mes de febrero, la comunidad de artistas de Todos Santos abre las puertas de sus estudios privados y lo invita a emprender una aventura por caminos de tierra y descubrir lo que se esconde detrás de sus paredes. La experiencia de visitar el estudio de un artista es completamente diferente a ver el trabajo del artista en el entorno formal de una galería. Es una oportunidad para conectarse más íntimamente con el artista, hacer preguntas, charlar sobre sus observaciones, ver sus herramientas del oficio e incluso obtener información sobre el proceso de trabajo personal del artista. Si esto suena intrigante, venga y descubra lo que atrae y mantiene a tantos artistas diversos de México, Estados Unidos, Canadá, Sudamérica, y Europa para establecerse en Todos Santos.

A lo largo de los años, muchos artistas han sido influenciados por los elementos de su entorno: el paisaje desértico, el vasto y dinámico océano, la majestuosa Sierra de La Laguna, la gente, la cultura y las cualidades distintivas de la luz, el aire y las nubes. Sin embargo, lo esencial para todos los artistas que han hecho de Todos Santos su hogar es un sentido generalizado, casi tangible, de comunidad artística.

El fin de semana comenzará el 8 de febrero, con un evento especial, "Vino y Queso, un Vistazo," un evento para recaudar fondos orientado hacia el programa de arte infantil. La artista y directora de programas de arte, Jill Mollenhauer, y su clase estarán presentes, iestén alerta de su sorpresa especial! Esta noche especial incluye un destello de unos 20 artistas cuyas obras de arte estarán a la venta con una parte de las ganancias donadas al Programa de Arte para Niños. Además, no dejes de votar por tu artista favorito. Emita su boleta para elegir al artista para el póster del evento del próximo año. El costo para este evento es de $150 MXN o $10 USD.

Es difícil creer que el Studio Tour comenzó hace diez años, con 12 artistas participando y solo un día. Hoy estamos orgullosos de haber crecido hasta convertirse en un evento de dos días con 40 artistas y que atrae a visitantes de toda Baja California Sur, Estados Unidos y Canadá. No es de extrañar que la revista Coastal Living incluya a Todos Santos entre las diez mejores colonias de artistas de América del Norte.

Los visitantes encontrarán una variedad de estilos y ESTUDIOS ABIERTOS continúa en página 50

Get Ready for the 10th Annual Todos Santos Open Studio Tour

by Jamie Sechrist

FEBRUARY 8 – 10, 2019

The Palapa Society is pleased to announce the 10th Annual Todos Santos Open Studio Tour. Each February, the community of Todos Santos artists open the doors to their private studios and invite you to take an adventure down rambling dirt roads and to discover what's hidden behind their walls. The experience of visiting an artist's studio is completely different from viewing the artist's work in the formal setting of a gallery. It's a chance to connect more intimately with the artist, ask questions, discuss observations, see their tools of the trade, and even gain insights into the artist's personal working process. If this sounds intriguing, come and discover what attracts and sustains so many diverse artists from Mexico, the United States, Canada, South America, and Europe to settle in Todos Santos.

Over the years, many artists have been influenced by the elements of their surroundings: the desert landscape, the vast and dynamic ocean, the majestic Sierra de La Laguna, the people, culture, and the distinctive qualities of light, air and clouds. However, essential to all artists who have made Todos Santos their home is a pervasive, almost tangible, sense of artistic community.

The weekend will start off on February 8, with a special event, "Wine and Cheese Sneak Peek," a fundraiser geared towards the Children's Art Program. Artist and art program director, Jill Mollenhauer, and her class will be in attendance—watch out for a special surprise from them! This special night includes a glimpse of about 20 artists whose art works are for sale with a portion of the proceeds donated to the Children's Art Program. Also, don't miss out on voting for your favorite artist. Cast your ballot to choose the artist for next year's event poster. The cost for this event is $150 MXN or $10 USD.

It is hard to believe that the Studio Tour started ten years ago, with 12 artists participating and lasting only one day. Today we are proud to have grown into a two-day event featuring 40 artists and attracting visitors from all over Baja California Sur, the United States and Canada. No wonder that Coastal Living magazine lists Todos Santos among the top ten artists colonies in North America.

Visitors will find a variety of styles and mediums including painters, sculptors, photographers, muralists, plein air outside the square land leaving us wishing we could see more. Her work can be perceived as abstraction with no less enjoyment than if you had insight into her life and read imagery into her work.

When asked about her actual painting process, Anne makes reference to her latest mantra of letting the painting paint itself and not being judgmental or overly self-conscious. But a painter can do this only if they have behind them the history of painting, composition, and what the medium of oil paint can do. She uses the oil paint and cold wax on a prepared paper which she says allows her to unearth colors and layers. "Paper is easy to transport and since I travel, I can easily bring my work with me and later adhere the finished work on paper to board. Paper also enables me to work with a multi-panel format that lets me create a larger rectangular composition and work more instinctually by dragging a line or a color across several sheets of edge-to-edge paper."

Anne Hebebrand was born in Germany into a family of late nineteenth and twentieth century artists. Her great-great uncle, Walter Leistikow (1865-1908), was a German Impressionist landscape painter and cofounder of the Association of German Artists, who revolted against the national status quo and promoted modern art in the early 20th century. Her grandmother Grete Leistikow, one of the first professionally trained female photographers in the 1920s, and, along with her brother Hans, a graphic artist and professor, designed the covers for Das Neue Frankfurt, a publication devoted to art, design and architecture. Her grandfather, Walter Hebebrand, was the noted Hamburg architect and city planner. From this artistic legacy, it is no small wonder that Anne's art is informed by 20th century masters such as Swiss and Russian-born artists Paul Klee and Wassily Kandinsky.

Anne talks about what it was like growing up in a family where art and artists were always present. "To grow up in a household where art is deeply valued, in my case abstract art, certainly made it easier to study and pursue a career in art, and it helped that my parents were very supportive. But I think that it is making art that always made me feel alive. The sense of excitement and exhilaration in creating has guided me over the years. There are so many obstacles an artist faces in their career, making a living and having a personal life can distract you, but for me the dominant force of needing (not just wanting) to make art, is what keeps me going. My years teaching art in high school, then at the college level, fed into that essential creative process. Teaching has been an integral part of making art and has helped me formally verbalize what I do as well as the philosophical ideas that surface. As in my own work, so it is in teaching that I have an inquisitive attitude of why we do what we do! Approaching a yet unformed art work as an experiment and exploring how it relates to oneself and one's surrounding is the great mystery to be unlocked—I have always enjoyed helping my students with that discovery and I always learned something new from my students!" Anne still teaches but less so now with only small groups of up to four students in her studio, both in Todos Santos and Bath, Maine, where she resides the other half of the year.

Anne Hebebrand's paintings are indeed beautiful, not just variations on a theme, but more like a studied conversation on painting with one painting giving dialog to another. Anne says, "Put into the most of simple of terms, I think a successful work of art is one that grabs you when you walk into a room, draws you near and then when you are up close, it will director of Rosa Esman Gallery, New York City. She resides in Todos Santos, BCS and California, USA.

seduce you even more with details that were not visible from far away."

So, take some risks and find your chair and plan to stay awhile with her paintings.

Anne Hebebrand will be exhibiting the paintings discussed above and other new work at Frank Brockman Gallery in Brunswick, Maine during the month of June 2019 and at the Jewish Museum in Portland from January through February 2020. She is also represented by Galería de Todos Santos in Todos Santos and the Pez Gordo Gallery in San José del Cabo.

Pamela Ambrose is the former Founding and Executive Director of the Loyola University Museum of Art (LUMA) in Chicago and the former New York City. She resides in Todos Santos, BCS and California, USA.

azules eléctricos y un grueso mechón de pelo blanco-rubio que llega hasta los hombros. En persona, a veces es tímido, pero siempre es amable y educado. Encantador y rápido para sonreír, posee una madurez más allá de sus años. Rara vez luce algo más que una camiseta de surf, pantalones cortos de surf y tenis Vans, y siempre está ansioso de contarle sobre su última sesión de surf. Está demasiado desarrollado físicamente, por lo general es media cabeza más alto que cualquier otro en su división de edad y, por lo general, pesa veinte libras más (9 kg).

Lucas nació prácticamente en el océano; su mamá, Laura, practicaba surf en la playa de Cerritos, solo unas horas antes de dar a luz. Los tiempos eran ajustados en los primeros años; Laura enseñaba medio tiempo en una escuela privada local y su padre tocaba música y trataba de vender pinturas. Aunque no había mucho dinero, este estilo de vida dejaba mucho tiempo libre para jugar en la playa. Cuando Lucas tenía dos años y medio, él estaba de pie sobre la espuma.

A fines del verano de 2014, nuestra familia fue a visitar a los abuelos en San Juan Capistrano, California, y aprovechar el concurso de surf profesional en San Clemente, donde competían muchos de los héroes del surf de Lucas. Esto resultó ser un momento crucial para Lucas y su familia. En la mañana del 14 de septiembre, el huracán Odile, la tormenta masiva de categoría cuatro, azotó Baja California Sur. Nuestra casa incompleta que habíamos logrado construir no tenía ninguna posibilidad con el gigante; fue destruida casi por completo. Sin un hogar al que volver, fui a trabajar para ahorrar dinero y reconstruir el hogar. Lucas, Eliana (la hermana pequeña de Lucas) y Laura pasaron todos los días de las próximas seis semanas en una pequeña ola llamada Doheny State Beach, California. Doheny es un perfecto pequeño lugar de derechas e izquierdas. Probablemente sea la mejor ola del mundo para aprender a mover tu tabla de surf, y eso es lo que Lucas aprendió a hacer: un rayo de luz, si es que hubo alguno.

A Lucas le encanta competir. Recientemente ha ingresado al circuito de surf WSA en el sur de California, por lo que puede mantener sus habilidades competitivas afiladas. La competencia ha sido dura. Lucas quedó en cuarto en la general en la división de menores de diez el año pasado, después de solo participar en seis de los diez eventos. Ocupó el segundo lugar en los campeonatos regionales, perdiendo el primer lugar por cuatro décimas de punto. En su primer evento de este año en la división de menores de 12 años, se llevó el cuarto lugar de 41 participantes.

Un día, Lucas espera estar en la World Surf League, representando a México. Hasta la fecha, México no tiene un solo surfista en el prestigioso tour. También espera representar a México en los Juegos Olímpicos. Por lo que podemos decir, su estrella está ascendiendo, y con su LUCAS continúa en página 49

Lucas loves to compete. He has recently been entering in the WSA surfing circuit in Southern California, so he can keep his competitive skills sharp. The competition has been tough. Lucas finished fourth overall in the under-ten division last year, after only surfing six of the ten events. He took second place in the regional championships, missing first place by four tenths of a point. In his first event this year in the under 12 division, he took fourth place out of 41 contestants.

One day, Lucas hopes to be on the World Surf League, representing Mexico. To date, Mexico doesn't have a single surfer on the prestigious tour. He also hopes to represent Mexico in the Olympics. As far as we can tell, his star is rising, and with his talent, anything is within his reach.

Lucas has been supported by the tight-knit local community from the very start. He would like to thank the following for their continued, loving support: Walter Graen at Graen surfboards, Zach Kelly at Rip Curl Ventura, Paula and Carlos at Todos Santos Surf Shop, Robert at Las Tunas Surfboards, Patrick at Pacifica Fish Market, Liliana and Israel at Biznaga Surf Wax, and all the locals who encourage Lucas every time he paddles out. If you or your company are interested in sponsoring or helping Lucas achieve his dream, please contact Eric or Laura at durazodesigns@hotmail.com

"Writing Down the Baja" Celebrates Nine Years of Writing Retreats

by Louise Hawker

January workshop marks longest-running creative writing workshop in Todos Santos.

Many people travel to Todos Santos and Baja for a mid-winter dose of sea, sand, and sun. But a group that convenes at the Serendipity Bed & Breakfast comes for an additional reason: to hone their writing skills in Todos Santos' longest running creative writing workshop. Writers venture from across the U.S. to join Writing Ranch and Ellen Waterston in "Writing Down the Baja." The 2019 retreat, scheduled for January 27 to February 3, marks the ninth year of these writing workshops led by Waterston, a prize-winning author, poet and experienced writing teacher.

Waterston chose Todos Santos as the retreat locale after several trips of her own to enjoy the pueblo mágico. She said, "Any emerging or established writer understands what a gift dedicated, uninterrupted writing time is for furthering a project; and understands how daily guided writing workshops can spark the imagination, improve one's craft and provide helpful critiquing. Add the magic of Todos Santos and staying in the nurturing quiet and beauty of Serendipity, and you have the formula for creative breakthroughs."

Those who participate in the retreats agree. Maybe that's why many of them return year after year. Each cohort forms life-long bonds as individuals and writers. Elizabeth Schaaf is a three-time attendee who will join the 2019 retreat. She said, "The retreat has become a wonderful gift I give to myself in winter. Serendipity proprietor Sharon Morris consistently makes our week one of total relaxation.

The lovely rooms, surrounding gardens, healthful food and the majestic ocean are conducive to reflection and writing."

Lest the retreats sound like one big beach vacation, the work of writing is hands-on, front and center. "Writing Down the Baja" is recognized for its rigorous exploration of the intersection of poetry and prose, fiction and nonfiction, through a curriculum developed by Waterston. She launches each day with writing prompts intended to spur participants to examine their lives and world from new perspectives. She stated, "My job, as I see it, is to reignite the creative pilot light of those attending, and to do so by providing writing inspiration and guidance. A writer myself, I know how important it is to refuel creatively."

Returning participant Gail Hill concurs. She noted, "I needed the physical and mental separation from home to free myself to write in new, more innovative ways. I'm a journalist by training, but Todos Santos unleashed me from those restraints and inspired me to seek new, more personal forms of expression."

Dick Linford, a two-time attendee, observed, "Ellen's prompts are always stimulating." After a mid-day opportunity to write, consult with Waterston or explore Todos, the group meets again to critique each other's work. Linford added, "Ellen has an amazing ability to listen to something a person writes and analyze it in some depth. She gives constructive criticism, but always finds something positive to say."

Waterston encourages writers to explore Todos Santos and incorporate its unique aspects in their work during the retreat. Schaaf said, "Each year, we've been treated to sea turtle hatchings and whale migrations. The magic of being in natural surroundings that are so different from my life at home has inspired and informed my writing.” Hill has a similar outlook. “A writing project I’ve been working on for several years has stalled amid the distractions of daily life. I plan to give it a hard kick in Todos Santos. Who knows how successful I’ll be but in the very least I’ll feel the warmth of the Todos Santos muse—and the sting of a good tequila.”

Guest presenters who attend the evening dinners enrich the retreat experience with both their writings about and their perspectives on the Baja. In 2019, “Writing Down the Baja” will welcome writers Bruce Berger in nonfiction, Gordon Chaplin and Kent Nelson in fiction, and documentary film producer Sarah Teale.

The benefits of the workshop last long after writers disperse to their home bases. As Schaaf said, “I’d kept a journal all my life, but never explored other forms of writing, such as poetry, haiku and fiction. With Ellen’s prompts, the world suddenly got larger and more interesting. Todos Santos became the perfect muse for this new exploration of self.”

The public is invited to attend a reading by 2019 “Writing Down the Baja” participants at Serendipity in Todos Santos on Saturday, February 2, 2019 at 5:30 pm. For more information about “Writing Down the Baja” and the Writing Ranch, visit www.writingranch.com or call (541) 480-3933.

de pesca a lo largo de la costa del golfo de la península y descubrí que nadie estaba pescando tiburones. Nadie siquiera estaba viendo tiburones. Habían desaparecido. En el año 2000, hubo una reunión en La Paz en la que se anunció que no había más tiburones martillo en El Bajo, un sitio en el que se habían estado congregando desde el tiempo que uno puede recordar."

En las islas Socorro del Archipiélago de Revillagigedo, a casi 500 kilómetros al suroeste de la península de Baja California, la historia es completamente diferente. "Es el último refugio para los tiburones en el Pacífico mexicano," dice Ketchum. "La distancia es protección." En 2010, Ketchum, entonces estudiante de doctorado en la Universidad de California, en el laboratorio de Peter Klimley, analizó los datos recopilados por Klimley y su colega Mauricio Hoyos-Padilla en una expedición de marcaje de tiburones de la National Geographic en las islas de Revillagigedo. Los tiburones fueron marcados con transmisores acústicos; una magnífica hazaña atlética, ya que a los tiburones no les gustan las burbujas del equipo de buceo, por lo tanto, solo los buzos de apnea fueron capaces de colocarse a menos de un metro de los tiburones y poder anclar los transmisores en el área carnosa justo detrás de la aleta dorsal. Los transmisores permitieron a Ketchum y otros investigadores analizar los datos de telemetría obtenidos por la expedición y comprender mejor los movimientos de los tiburones. Inspirados por sus hallazgos, Ketchum y Hoyos-Padilla solicitaron y ganaron una subvención del World Wildlife Fund (WWF) para formar Pelagios Kakunjá y continuar con el programa de marcado de tiburones. (Kakunjá significa "proteger" en el idioma Guaycura, y Pelagios significa vida del océano abierto).

Pelagios Kakunjá se centró inicialmente en tres proyectos de marcado de tiburones: los tiburones blancos en Isla Guadalupe, frente a la costa norte de la península de Baja, los tiburones martillo en el Mar de Cortés y los tiburones martillo en el Archipiélago de Revillagigedo. "Pero como no habían suficientes tiburones martillo en el Mar de Cortés para construir un proyecto, decidimos enfocar toda nuestra energía en los martillo de las Revillagigedo," señala Ketchum.

El archipiélago de Revillagigedo está compuesto por cuatro islas volcánicas, y bajo su designación original de reserva de la biosfera, las seis millas náuticas alrededor de cada isla estaban protegidas. "Eran como donas," observa Ketchum, "cada una separada de la otra. Nuestra investigación mostró la vasta conectividad de todas las aguas del archipiélago para los tiburones. Los tiburones no solo descansaban en las seis millas náuticas alrededor de cada isla, sino que viajaban por toda el área. El estado de reserva de la biosfera no hizo nada para proteger a los tiburones, ya que los pescadores simplemente podían ir entre las islas para pescarlos."

Trabajando con la Comisión Nacional de Áreas Naturales Protegidas (CONANP), ONGs y otras instituciones académicas mexicanas, Pelagios Kakunjá reunió la documentación para designar a las Revillagigedo como Patrimonio de la Humanidad por la UNESCO. El diseño de Ketchum para hacer del archipiélago un área marina protegida que tomó en cuenta la conectividad del área, se incluyó en la documentación de la UNESCO. "La UNESCO pudo ver que el área de protección de seis millas náuticas era inadecuada, por lo que uno de sus requisitos era aumentar el área protegida a 12 millas náuticas. Logramos eso, y el área fue designada Patrimonio de la Humanidad por la UNESCO en 2016. Eso fue algo maravilloso para las Revillagigedo, pero el área protegida aún no era suficiente para considerar la conectividad de las islas y los patrones de nado de los tiburones. El modelo creado en mi tesis doctoral indicó que los tiburones martillo usaban un rango de hogar de 40 millas náuticas alrededor de cada isla en el Pacífico Oriental, y eso es lo que necesitábamos para expandir el área de restricción de pesca y así proteger adecuadamente a los tiburones."

Ketchum y Hoyos-Padilla presentaron la nueva idea de expansión para las Revillagigedo que fue muy bien recibida, en una conferencia científica en 2014. "Posteriormente, conocí a alguien de Pew Charitable Trusts que estaba interesado en mi trabajo y acordé ayudar a expandir y acender el área protegida a un Parque Nacional Marino. La gente de Pew nos contactó con un grupo de abogados en la Ciudad de México, Beta Diversidad, que llevó a cabo el trabajo político necesario para impulsar esta iniciativa con el gobierno mexicano. En el verano del 2017, trabajamos con otros científicos para compilar una enorme cantidad de documentación que se presentó al gobierno. Debimos de haber sido convincentes, porque en noviembre de 2017, el Archipiélago de Revillagigedo fue declarado Parque Nacional Marino, con una zona de no pesca de 148,000 kilómetros cuadrados, o 57,000 millas cuadradas. Es el área marina protegida más grande de América del Norte."

El Archipiélago de Revillagigedo fue designado como Patrimonio de la Humanidad por la UNESCO porque, al igual que las Galápagos, es un in November 2017 the Revillagigedo Archipelago was declared a national marine park, a no-fishing zone of 148,000 square kilometers, or 57,000 square miles. It is the largest marine protected area in North America."

The Revillagigedo Archipelago was designated a UNESCO World Heritage site because, like the Galapagos, it is a place of extraordinary natural beauty, and one of the most biodiverse places on the planet. It is the best place in the world to see the amazing giant manta rays, and it is the only place in the Eastern Pacific where you can see six shark species in a single dive. Further north, in the Sea of Cortés, the shark-viewing is generally not nearly so grand. So, this is also a tale of two UNESCO World Heritage Sites. 244 islands of the Gulf of California form a UNESCO World Heritage Site and have biosphere reserve status, yet unlike the Revillagigedo Archipelago, most of the waters in between are not protected, and the shark population has been decimated. As Ketchum has demonstrated, protection has to be extended between islands to have an impact.

But not all is lost in the Gulf of California. There is one truly bright spot in the Gulf at the moment, and that is Cabo Pulmo National Marine Park. The park was established in 1995 as a result of the efforts of local citizens who wanted to restore the marine life that had been dramatically depleted due to overfishing. They succeeded beyond their wildest dreams. In 2009, the Scripps Institute of Oceanography in San Diego released the results of a 10-year study on Cabo Pulmo in which they called the park the "most robust marine preserve in the world," and demonstrated that the total amount of fish in the reserve had increased 460% between 1999 and 2009. Cabo Pulmo had recovered to a level comparable to a pristine site that has never been fished by humans. Notes Ketchum, "In 2011 we started seeing the return of sharks in Cabo Pulmo, including bull sharks, lemon sharks, and black-tip sharks, and it is very encouraging to see that the ecosystem has recovered its apex predator. But Cabo Pulmo National Marine Park is only 70 square kilometers, just a tiny part of the Gulf of California. Once the sharks leave the area, they are vulnerable again."

One of the key missions of Pelagios Kakunjá now is to create more "shark parks" in the Gulf of California to give wider protection to the sharks in the areas they roam. "But it is a lot more complicated than in the Revillagigedos," observes Ketchum. "In the Revillagigedos, there is no SHARKS continued on page 43

Voices From The Todos Santos Writers Workshop

by Rex Weiner

The Todos Santos Writers Workshop is now in its sixth season, this year running February 2 to 9, 2019 at the Casa Dracula on the otro lado. We've asked a few of our past participants to share some of their thoughts and experiences at TSWW. We consider our literary community a family, joined by a belief that the solitary activity of writing is nourished and informed by sharing work and creative energy with others. Our family grows each year, along with our deep connection to Todos Santos, and we'd like to introduce you to some of our members below:

Rex Weiner, Executive Director, TSWW

NICK TRIOLLO

I've had opportunities to participate in several writing workshops in North America, but for me, the Todos Santos Writers Workshop is so unique because of its stage and setting: the pairing of world-class literary leadership with a world-class destination.

The natural environment of Baja California Sur offers a perfect winter refugio—not just for participants but also for thousands of migratory birds, whales, and sea turtles! This venue stirs the imagination and jumpstarts any book project, essay, or poem you might be wrestling with. That's why I've been returning to the workshop for the past three years.

But my love affair with Todos Santos started way before I'd ever heard about the workshop. More than fifteen years ago, my aunt bought a small casita here. I've been visiting every year since, running the trails, exploring the mountains, surfing at Cerritos, and volunteering with the turtle release efforts.

There's just something different about Todos Santos, something abuzz, where each participant and workshop leader connects with the electric pulse of this peninsula, making every minute of the workshop precious.

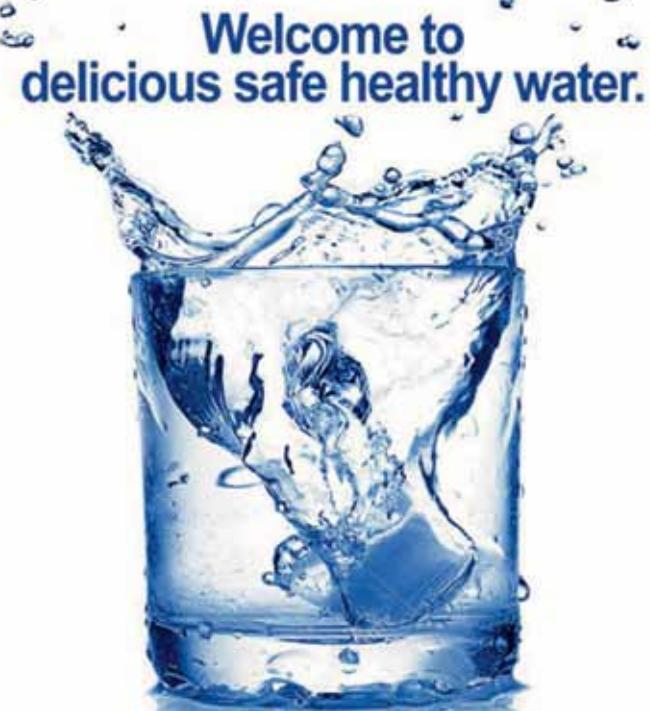

Studying poetic form for a week with Christopher Merrill, an award-winning writer and educator (U. of Iowa), and Obama appointee to the National Council on the Humanities, was incredibly rewarding for me. I returned home with a full notebook, a full heart, and several new poems to share with the world.

Most importantly, through the Todos Santos Writers Workshop, I've grown my writing community, creative networks that I've continued to stay in touch with and leverage as I seek further influence with my work.

ERIN RECH

I arrived at the Todos Santos Writers Workshop last year with a concept for writing a memoir, along with a desire for refuge from the brutal New York City winter. While writing is essential in my day-to-day worklife, I was hoping the workshop experience would help restore my passion for writing, and that I might actually become a writer.

Our memoir group gathered under the palapa at Casa

Dracula each day with our instructor, Jeanne McCulloch, the accomplished editor and author of her own recently published memoir, All Happy Families. She piled well-worn memoirs by other authors on the table, so we could mine their pages for style, voice and approach. She fed us prompts that made us squirm, smile, and cry as we read aloud our short pieces.

After class, we wandered across the street to La Esquina to feed our writer brains before we dove into our assignments. A few afternoons, we attended seminars at which other prominent authors spoke about their work and the craft of writing. When we needed inspiration, we roamed the streets of Todos Santos, devoured the best fish tacos, navigated the bumpy dirt roads to the beach to watch the waves pummel the shore, and took yoga class in Cuatro Vientos' palm-gilded studio.

At the closing dinner, each of us took turns reading from the work we'd done to the full group and witnessed a transformation: we were no longer on individual quests to tell our stories. We had achieved a collective understanding of our need to share, to write, to connect.

I will return this coming year with over 30,000 words of my first draft, ready to sculpt my first chapter. Without the workshop, writing was a daydream. Now, it's my life force.

JEFFREY GRAHAM

The University of Casa Dracula, a pen-insular habitat of funky sophistication, hosts the week's curricula organized around a cornucopia of writers, and our shared passion for words.

A curious mix of concrete and spectral emanations blend here to gin up an ecosystem budding to creative effect. Thanks to TSWW's director Rex Weiner, a "reporting for duty" discipline instills a seriousness of purpose: We are here to work.

From the start I feel myself emerging from bad habits: tiresome reticence, self-doubt, and longing. I set out strong, drawing courage from my peers and expert teaching from my indefatigable poetry guide, Christopher Merrill, impelled to observe, to meditate, to search, and above all else to compose.

I free-associate. I dream literally and vividly. I return to the task, for that is all that matters. And every time I come back to the page, I re-experience the joy in it, the glide, the spills, the colors and gestures that populate Todos Santos.

Here we have Spartan luxury, and time well spent.

I left TSWW as I had arrived: full of gratitude, yet very much changed by this dynamic aperture for self-expression, this cozy/hygge sense of belonging to a fraternity of writers and strivers.

DEIDRE REED

Here's the deal for me: writing workshops run the gamut. And they're not cheap endeavors.

True story: I once tried a weeklong writer's workshop on Maui. But between the guy compulsively combing his beard hair and the stink of desperation during the 'pitching an agent' session, I bailed. Went scuba diving and considered the whole weird-ass experience a tax write-off.

So, why take a chance on the Todos Santos Writers Workshop?

The background of the instructors intrigued me and impressed me. And intimidated me. The schedule didn't have any yoga breaks, thank you Baby Jesus. Also, the website said that horses roamed the streets.

As it turned out, I ended up splitting a rental car with Sylvia from New York City, a school teacher originally from Peru. TSWW continued on page 66

DOVES

These prevalent seed eaters tend to mate for life. The male dove brings the female twigs, grasses, roots, and other nesting materials, which he sometimes pushes directly under her. Over the course of one-to-three days she builds a simple platform nest, which may include feathers, wool, string, and wire. A pair often uses the same nest for multiple broods during the year, raising the babies, called squabs or squeakers in "dove talk." The nestlings hatch in 14 days, then move on to be fledglings in only 17 days, leaving the nest shortly thereafter, with the parents help of course.

ZONE-TAILED HAWK

An intriguing adaptation of one of our wonderful resident raptors is that of the zone-tailed hawk. The bird's flight feathers and flight profile closely resemble those of the turkey vulture. Zone-tailed hawks soar with their wings held in a position pointing slightly upwards, while most other hawks hold them in a horizontal position. It is easy to overlook, or confuse them from a distance, if the birds are soaring together reasonably close, the hawks will be a bit smaller. The zone-tailed hawk has a black body with

PALOMAS

Estos predominantes comedores de semillas tienden a aparearse de por vida. La paloma macho trae ramitas, paja, raíces y otros materiales de anidación, que a veces empuja directamente debajo de ella. En el transcurso de uno a tres días, construye un nido de plataforma simple, que puede incluir plumas, lana, cuerda y alambre. A menudo, una pareja usa el mismo nido para múltiples crías durante el año, criando a los bebés, llamados pichones o chilladores en "idioma palomo." Los polluelos incuban por 14 días, luego pasan a ser pichones en solo 17 días, dejando el nido poco después, con la ayuda de los padres, por supuesto.

AGUILUCHO NEGRO

Una adaptación intrigante de una de nuestras maravillosas rapaces residentes es la del halcón de aguilucho negro. Las plumas y el perfil de vuelo del ave se parecen mucho a los del zopilote aura. Los halcones de aguilucho negro se elevan con sus alas sostenidas en una posición apuntando ligeramente hacia arriba, mientras que la mayoría de los otros halcones las mantienen en posición horizontal. Es fácil pasarlas por alto, o confundirlas a la distancia, si las white markings on the wings and tail, like a turkey vulture, with the difference being the shape of the tail and its distinctive white stripes. The zone-tailed hawk also has bright yellow legs and beak with a dark head.

Turkey vultures do not normally prey on live animals, but zone-tailed hawks are active predators, thus the adaptation of disguise is a helpful hunting technique.

HOUSE FINCH AND CARDINAL

The brilliant red plumage on these bird species isn't just pretty; it has a purpose. Male house finches attract mates with their bright red coloring. Also, the bright markings possibly help them defend their territories. Red feathers long posed one mystery, however as scientists didn't know how birds grew them. Most birds acquire warm colors from molecules, called carotenoids, that is in the food they eat. But carotenoids usually only produce a yellow pigment; only a few birds can transform it to a red one. Now it is known that these bird species carry a gene that creates an enzyme known to interact with these carotenoids and is critical for producing red plumage.

aves se elevan juntas razonablemente cerca, los halcones serán un poco más pequeños. El halcón de aguilucho negro tiene un cuerpo negro con marcas blancas en las alas y la cola, como un zopilote aura, con la diferencia de la forma de la cola y sus rayas blancas distintivas. El halcón aguilucho negro también tiene patas de color amarillo brillante y pico con una cabeza oscura.

Los zopilote aura normalmente no se aprovechan de animales vivos, pero los halcones de aguilucho negro son depredadores activos, por lo que la adaptación del disfraz es una técnica de caza útil.

solo bonito; tiene un propósito. Los pinzones mexicanos machos atraen a su pareja con su color rojo brillante. Además, las marcas brillantes posiblemente les ayudan a defender sus territorios. Las plumas rojas durante mucho tiempo plantearon un misterio, los científicos no sabían cómo las aves las obtenían. La mayoría de las aves adquieren colores cálidos a partir de moléculas, llamadas carotenoides, que se encuentran en los alimentos que consumen. Pero los carotenoides usualmente solo producen un pigmento amarillo; Sólo unos pocos pájaros pueden transformarlo en rojo. Ahora se sabe que estas especies de aves portan un gen que crea una enzima que se sabe que interactúa con estos carotenoides y es fundamental para producir el plumaje rojo.

El Cielo: The Baja Sky

by Roc Fleishman

Welcome to the holiday 2018/2019 edition of El Cielo, highlighting the more visible movements of the heavenly objects above the Pacific Coast of Baja California Sur. Keep this list close at hand and enjoy the sky.

MOON/PLANET CALENDAR DECEMBER

- 21 Mercury and Jupiter rise within a degree of each other around 7 am. Winter solstice at 3:22 pm, with the sun's declination at a minimum of -23.435°.
- 15 – 31 Comet 46P Wirtanen will be getting brighter then dimming again throughout this period, and well placed for viewing with binoculars. You will need to have finder charts to know where to look though and it is best with no moon in the sky.

JANUARY 2019

- 1 7 am, thin waning crescent moon and Venus are within 4° before sunrise in the east.
- 3 7 am, very thin waning crescent moon and Jupiter rise close together with Mercury below.
- 3-4 All night of the third/fourth could be streaked with the maximum of the Quadrantid meteor shower, as it is supposed to peak at 7 pm on the third. It radiates from the constellation Boötes (northern) and is always active from around December 31, until January 6 or so. There won't be any real interference from the moon, so get out and see some streaks.

- 20 Total Lunar Eclipse. The partial phase starts at 8:33 pm, and totality starts at 9:41 pm. It is expected to be a relatively bright eclipse with the maximum at 10:12 pm. Totality ends at 10:43 pm in our area. Should be beautiful with the moon rising over the sierras.
- 30 - Feb. 1 The waning crescent moon moves through the string of planets. On the morning of January 30, it is just above Jupiter. The next morning, the 31st, it is down between Venus and Jupiter, then getting thinner and lower, it is between Venus and Saturn on the morning of the first.

lugar de extraordinaria belleza natural y uno de los lugares con mayor biodiversidad en el planeta. Es el mejor lugar del mundo para ver las increíbles mantarrayas gigantes, y es el único lugar en el Pacífico Oriental donde se pueden ver seis especies de tiburones en una sola inmersión. Más al norte, en el Mar de Cortés, la observación de tiburones no suele ser tan grandiosa. Por lo tanto, esta es también una historia de dos sitios declarados Patrimonio Mundial de la UNESCO. 244 islas del Golfo de California forman parte del Patrimonio Mundial de la UNESCO y tienen el estado de reserva de la biosfera, pero a diferencia del Archipiélago de Revillagigedo, la mayoría de las aguas intermedias no están protegidas, y la población de tiburones ha sido diezmada. Como Ketchum ha demostrado, la protección debe extenderse también entre las islas para tener efecto.

Pero no todo está perdido en el Golfo de California. Existe un punto realmente resaltante en el Golfo en este momento, y es el Parque Nacional Marino de Cabo Pulmo. El parque se estableció en 1995 como resultado de los esfuerzos de los pobladores locales que querían restaurar la vida marina que se había agotado drásticamente debido a la sobre pesca. Los resultados fueron más allá de lo que habían soñado. En 2009, el Instituto Scripps de Oceanografía en San Diego publicó los resultados de un estudio de 10 años en Cabo Pulmo en el que calificaron al parque como la "reserva marina más robusta del mundo" y demostraron que la cantidad total de peces en la reserva había aumentado en un 460% entre 1999 y 2009. Cabo Pulmo se había recuperado a un nivel comparable al de un sitio prístino en donde los humanos nunca han pescado. Observa Ketchum: "En 2011 comenzamos a ver el regreso de los tiburones en Cabo Pulmo, incluidos los tiburones toro, los tiburones limón y los tiburones de punta negra; y es muy alentador ver que el ecosistema ha recuperado su depredador tope. Pero el Parque Nacional Marino de Cabo Pulmo tiene apenas 70 kilómetros cuadrados, siendo tan solo una pequeña parte del Golfo de California. Una vez que los tiburones abandonan la zona, vuelven a ser vulnerables."

Una de las misiones claves de Pelágicos Kakunjá ahora es crear más "parques de tiburones" en el Golfo de California y así poder brindar

mayor protección a los tiburones en las áreas en las que se desplazan. "Pero es mucho más complicado que en las Revillagigedo," observa Ketchum. "En las Revillagigedo, no hay una población humana local que dependa económicamente del área, por lo que fue más fácil hacer una prohibición total en la pesca. En el Golfo de California, hay más intereses, un aspecto socioeconómico completamente diferente a tener en cuenta." Pero el éxito del Archipiélago Revillagigedo muestra cómo un área marina protegida (AMP) puede de hecho beneficiar a los pescadores de la zona. "Una de mis ex estudiantes graduadas, Frida Lara, ha estado rastreando barcos de pesca en las Revillagigedo a través del sitio web de Global Fishing Watch. Lo que hemos visto, es que los barcos de pesca se alinean al rededor del perímetro del parque, hasta lo más cerca que pueden llegar, y capturan tiburones adultos y otros peces que nadan fuera del límite de la AMP. Lo que hemos aprendido es que las AMPs son en realidad una gran herramienta de pesca, y esperamos aplicar este modelo en muchas otras áreas del Golfo. Hemos realizado varios talleres con pescadores artesanales que trabajan en el área, y sentimos que hay una cantidad cada vez mayor de apoyo para proteger a los tiburones, tanto por la pesca de otras especies, como por la pesca con anzuelo y líneas en lugar de redes." Ketchum señala que los pescadores no son los únicos interesados. "Actualmente estamos haciendo un documental sobre lo que le sucedió a La Paz cuando desaparecieron los tiburones martillo. En realidad, hubo una gran disminución en el turismo de alto poder adquisitivo, ya que la gente de los EE.UU. simplemente dejó de ir a La Paz porque no había ni un tiburón martillo con que nadar. Una aventura que había sido una gran atracción para muchos. El tener 'parques de tiburones' protegidos, particularmente alrededor de El Bajo, Las Animas e Isla Cerralvo también será un gran negocio para los interesados en el turismo."

Los tiburones han estado deambulando por los mares del planeta durante más de 400 millones de años, convirtiéndolos en uno de los animales más antiguos de la tierra. Han sobrevivido durante milenios, pero ahora los tiburones representan el grupo más grande de especies marinas en peligro de extinción en la Lista Roja de especies amenazadas de la UICN. El miedo a los tiburones, inspirado en historias populares y películas, resulta en el extenso sacrificio de tiburones cerca de playas públicas. Este temor, combinado con la voraz demanda de aletas de tiburón y carne de tiburón, ha provocado la muerte de más de 100 millones de tiburones cada año, aunque los científicos señalan que el número podría ser mucho mayor. Por su parte, los tiburones en realidad no cazan humanos, y matan por error a entre cinco y 15 personas

Beaches / Playas

by Janice Kinne

Todos Santos lies inland along the rugged Pacific coast. There are miles of beautiful white sand beaches accessible down unmarked dirt roads.

This stretch of the Pacific Ocean is a very dangerous place to swim at any time of the year. Strong rip currents and backwash are common. People have drowned in waters near Todos Santos simply because they were too close to the ocean while on beaches with steep drop-offs. There are no lifeguards on duty at any area beaches.

You can access the LA POZA and LA CACHORA beaches via the La Cachora road. Both are suitable for walking, fishing, whale watching, relaxing, or sunbathing. They are not swimming beaches.

Because of the big waves breaking on the shore, La Cachora beach has become popular with skim boarders.

La Poza has a large freshwater lagoon that is great for bird watching. If you are going to swim in the lagoon be very careful. The lagoon may appear to be shallow, but has many sudden drop-offs and is actually very deep.

PUNTA LOBOS, named for a sea lion colony, is also known as the fishermen's beach. Simply follow calle Francisco Bojorquez Vidal (formerly calle Punta Lobos) south out of town, or turn off at km 54 from Highway 19. You will pass an old cannery from the days when fishermen could harvest sea turtles legally. There is a small freshwater lagoon at Punta Lobos with a shrine to the Virgin.

The fishermen ride their panga boats on the waves onto the beach between 1 and 3 pm. Their return is exciting to watch and you can usually buy fresh fish from the cooperatives.

The two fishing cooperatives have exclusive rights to the "launch zone" at Playa Punta Lobos. For reasons of safety and due to past problems, boat launching at Punta Lobos is not permitted without their express permission.

The only recommended swimming beaches are outside of Pescadero. SAN PEDRO, also known as PALM BEACH (Playa Las Palmas), is near km 57. Its entrance is across Highway 19 from the Campo Experimental—stay to the left as you pass the abandoned hacienda. Las Palmas is a beautiful, secluded beach surrounded by a palm grove with a freshwater lagoon that is home to a variety of plants, birds, and wildlife.

Due to strong currents (especially near the rocky point), swimming is safer 50 meters from the rocks. Swim with caution and always have a land reference. The property surrounding Palm Beach is privately owned. The gates are open from 6 am to 9 pm daily. Car break-ins have been reported at Palm Beach. Leave your valuables at home!

PLAYA SAN PEDRITO is a rocky surfing beach around km 60, about 4.6 miles (7.4 km) from Todos Santos.

PLAYA LOS CERRITOS is located at km 64 about BEACHES continued on page 42

eight miles (12.8 km) south of Todos Santos. Look for the turnoff after the hill, south of Puente El Pescadero. Los Cerritos is a popular spot for surfing, boogie boarding, swimming, and fishing. Swim with caution due to strong riptides near the rocks. It is recommended to stay at least 50 meters from the rocks. The most secure swimming area is in front of the restaurant/bar. Swim with caution and always have a land reference. There is a long stretch of beach to the south that is perfect for walking or running. Surfboard rentals and other services are available.

MARIO'S SURF SCHOOL provides surfing lessons, board rentals, repairs, and accessories. Call for information.

PESCADERO SURF CAMP, #36 on the Pescadero map, provides surfing lessons and surfaris.

TODOS SANTOS ECO ADVENTURES, #163 on the Todos Santos map. Since 2002 Todos Santos Eco Adventures (TOSEA) has been providing visitors with opportunities to explore, celebrate, and help conserve the magnificently diverse ecosystems of Baja. TOSEA offers whale and bird-watching trips in the Pacific lagoons; treks and ranchero culture programs in the Sierra la Laguna mountains; Sea Turtle Camp and surfing surfaris on the Pacific coast, and kayaking, "glamping," whale shark, and sea lion adventures in the Sea of Cortez.

TODOS SANTOS SURF SHOP, #86 on the Todos Santos map, sells and rents surf boards, offers beach supplies and activities around Todos Santos. They carry international brands like Vans, Rip Curl, Dakine, Exile, and Rainbow & Havaianas sandals. They also carry many locally handmade wares, clothes, bikinis, accessories, natural sunscreen, and the beloved "Eclipse" boards shaped by Meisy of Todos Santos. They offer tours to swim with whale sharks and sea lions, surfing lessons, fishing trips, trips to Espíritu Santo Island, and whale watching in Magdalena Bay.

local human population economically invested in the area, so it was easier to make a total ban in fishing. In the Gulf of California, there are a lot more stakeholders, a whole different socioeconomic aspect to take into account." But the success of the Revillagigedo Archipelago shows how a marine protected area (MPA) can actually benefit fishermen in the area. "One of my former graduate students, Frida Lara, has been tracking fishing boats in the Revillagigedos via the Global Fishing Watch website. What we're seeing is fishing boats lined around the perimeter of the park, as close as they can get, and catching the adult sharks and other fish that swim outside the MPA boundary. What we've learned is that the MPAs are actually a great fisheries tool, and we're hoping to apply this model across many other areas of the Gulf. We've done several workshops with artisanal fishermen who work in the area, and we feel like there is an increasing amount of support for protecting the sharks, both by fishing for other species, and by fishing only with hook and line, foregoing the nets." Ketchum notes that fishermen are not the only stakeholders. "We're currently doing a documentary on what happened to La Paz when the hammerheads disappeared. There was actually a huge decrease in high-dollar tourism, as people from the US simply stopped coming to La Paz since there were no longer any hammerheads to dive with, an adventure that had been a major draw for many. Having protected 'shark parks,' particularly around El Bajo, Las Animas, and Isla Cerralvo will be great business for the tourism stakeholders as well."

Sharks have been roaming the planet's seas for over 400 million years, making them one of the most ancient animals on earth. They have survived through the millenniums, yet now sharks represent the largest group of endangered marine species on the IUCN Red List of threatened species. The fear of sharks, inspired by popular stories like Jaws, results in the extensive culling of sharks near public beaches. This fear, combined with the ravenous demand for shark fins and shark meat, has resulted in more than 100 million sharks being killed each year, although scientists note the number could actually be much higher. For their part, sharks do not actually hunt humans, and mistakenly kill only five to 15 people annually. According to Edgar Becerril, a PhD student at CICIMAR and Pelágicos Kakunjá, sharks bring balance to the ocean. "Sharks are a keystone species, which means that if they are removed from the ocean, the complex food webs of the ocean ecosystem could actually collapse. Sharks keep other prey species from becoming too large and causing harm to the ecosystem, and also keep fish populations healthier by taking out the old and infirm." SharkSavers, a program of WildAid, agrees, noting, "A number of scientific studies demonstrate that the depletion of sharks results in the loss of commercially important fish and shellfish species down the food chain, including key fisheries such as tuna, that maintain the health of coral reefs. In addition, through intimidation, sharks regulate the behavior of prey species,

La Sociedad de La Palapa Celebra
15 Años de Educación de Calidad
por Laurel D'Angelo

traducido por Ricardo Madrazo

Todo comenzó con una sola beca otorgada a la hija de un trabajador agrícola migrante en El Pescadero. Quince años después, la Sociedad de La Palapa de Todos Santos, AC, se ha convertido en un testimonio de lo que se puede lograr cuando la comunidad local, los donantes generosos y voluntarios trabajan juntos para ayudar a mejorar las vidas de los niños y sus familias.

La Sociedad Palapa comenzó en 2003 con Jeanne Cordova y Lynn Ballen, residentes locales que creían que el secreto de un futuro exitoso para el área de Todos Santos reside en brindar acceso a una educación de calidad para los niños y jóvenes en preparación para su vida de adultos.

Inicialmente, recaudaron fondos para ayudar a las familias de bajos recursos cubrir gastos educativos con uniformes y libros. Poco después, el grupo reconoció la necesidad de cursos de inglés para los niños locales. Así inició el programa Puente al Inglés, dando clases en una casa. Este programa permite a los alumnos aprender directamente de gente cuyo primer idioma es el inglés. En dos años la Sociedad de La Palapa agregó una biblioteca comunitaria, un programa de arte para niños, un programa de asistencia médica, y cursos de inglés para adultos. En 2012, la agrupación se cambió a una casa en San Vicente gracias a la generosidad de Chloe Johnson y Peter Buck, con un plan a cinco años para construir un centro comunitario. La Sociedad de La Palapa se consolidaba como una fuente importante de programas que nutren a las jóvenes vidas de nuestro pueblo mágico.

En 2017, gracias a los fondos generados por el Festival de Música Todos Santos y a un generoso donativo de David y Cindy Higgins, se inauguró el Centro Educativo La Palapa, escuela secundaria certificada por la SEP con énfasis en matemáticas, ciencias, y computación. La escuela además tiene clubes de música, filosofía, y más. La Sociedad de La Palapa ha sido reconocida por la ex embajadora de EEUU, Roberta Jacobson, como un excelente ejemplo de cómo la comunidad extranjera se integra en una comunidad y tiene un impacto positivo.

The Palapa Society Celebrates 15 Years of Quality Education

by Laurel D'Angelo

It all started with a single scholarship given to the daughter of a migrant farm worker in El Pescadero. Fifteen years later, The Palapa Society of Todos Santos, A.C., has become a testament to what can be accomplished when the local community, generous donors, and dedicated volunteers work together to help improve the lives of children and their families.

The Palapa Society began in 2003 with Jeanne Cordova and Lynn Ballen, local expat homeowners who believed that the secret to a successful future for Todos Santos and the surrounding pueblos and rural areas, resides in providing children access to a quality education in preparation for their adult lives.

Initially, they raised funds to help low-income families pay expenses to attend public school by providing uniforms and books. Next, the group recognized a need for English courses for local children. So, they started the Bridge to English (Puente) program out of their home. This program enabled students to learn English from native English speakers. Within two years, The Palapa Society had added a community library, children's art program, the Chino medical program, and an English program for adults. By 2012, The Palapa Society moved to a new home in the San Vicente neighborhood provided by local homeowners, Chloe Johnson and Peter Buck, with a five-year plan to build a community center. It was clear that The Palapa

Society was on track to creating quality programs to help nourish the young lives in this small pueblo mágico.

In 2017, through funds raised by the Todos Santos Music Festival and a generous donation from David and Cindy Higgins, the Palapa Learning Center opened its doors to the SEP-certified Palapa middle school, with a curriculum emphasizing math, science, and computers. The school also has study clubs for music, philosophy, and more. The Palapa Society has also been recognized by former U.S. Ambassador Roberta Jacobson as being a prime example of the foreign community integrating into a community and making a positive impact.

The Palapa Learning Center also houses the Puente building for English language classes and the children's library; plus, the largest, most comprehensive, bilingual library in Baja California Sur, Biblioteca Elena Poniatowska.

Thanks to all the generous donations during the last 15 years, The Palapa Society, has given almost 900 full and partial scholarships to academically gifted middle, high school, and university students in need of financial assistance, and offers programs and services that reach over 200 children each year.

La Paz Beaches

The malecón along the bay of La Paz is the perfect place to walk, run, people watch, or enjoy gazing across the water. Crews clean the beaches and walkways daily, fresh sand has been imported and there are palapas to offer shade. Locals and tourists visit the beaches north of downtown to swim, snorkel, or kayak. There are several adventure companies along the malecón and at the marinas offering panga rides, bay and island cruises, snorkeling, scuba diving, fishing, sailing, and kayak rentals.

EL MOGOTÉ is the spit of land that separates the harbor of La Paz from the Bahía de La Paz. This natural treasure used to be, for the most part, accessible only with 4WD. Now driving onto the peninsula is restricted due to the construction of golf courses, homes, and hotels.

PLAYA EL COROMUEL 4.5 km from downtown La Paz, is the first beach north of town and an easy walk from downtown. It is within the harbor boundaries, has shaded palapas, and food / beverage services. The water here gets much better flow with the tide change and is suitable for swimming. The bottom is clean sand and rock. Snorkeling is good further out.

PLAYA EL TESORO 13 km from downtown La Paz, is a great little beach for children. The shallow, clear waters allow you to walk out for close to 100 meters. Tesoro has about 25 shaded palapas, two small restaurants, and kayak rentals.

PICHILINGUE 19 km from downtown La Paz. Pichilingue is home to the La Paz ferry terminus and a large commercial harbor. There are pleasant, small beaches just north of the deep water port, on the Vieja Bahía de Pichilingue. Beachfront food, beverage service, and kayak rentals are available and there is a restaurant with an upstairs view. The palapa bar is popular in the hot summer afternoons.

PLAYA BALANDRA 23 km from downtown La Paz, is known for its famous balancing rock formation landmark that resembles a prehistoric mushroom. You can view the rock formation and playa El Hongo by walking in the water around the cliff to your right. The large beach and surrounding area are beautiful. The waters surrounding Balandra are shallow and safe for children. Sheltered from wave action from nearly every direction, the water warms early and is very safe for swimmers and kayaking. There are also several little beaches (coves) and mangroves to explore. The beach has no services, so pack your own lunches and drinks for the day. There are vendors renting chairs, selling fruit and drinks, beach palapas for shade, and BBQ pits to the south.

PLAYA EL TECOLOTE 26 km from downtown La Paz, is by far the largest and most visited beach in La Paz. Two restaurant/bars offer shade palapas and a large number of beach vendors offer refreshments. RV camping is available, along with a wide variety of water sports rentals. Usually there are no lifeguards on duty, but they may be present during la semana santa and in the summer. The beach has a beautiful view of Isla Espíritu Santo and panga rides to the island are available—a 6.5 km crossing through the San Lorenzo channel. Bus service from the station on the malecón to playa El Tecolote is available for a nominal charge.

Sting rays are the biggest hazard at the playas and tend to be present on the bottom in shallow waters during the summer. When walking in the water, shuffle your feet on the bottom to avoid stepping directly on a resting ray.

There are no restrictions for beach fishing at any beaches. Please respect our beaches and help protect the sea turtles; don't leave trash or drive on the dunes or beaches.

"The Tango War—The Struggle for the Hearts, Minds and Riches of Latin America during World War II" with Jo Ann McConahay, historian and author. Beginning in the thirties, both the Allies and the Axis were aware of the need to control not just the hearts and minds but also the resources of Latin America. The fight was often dirty: residents were captured to exchange for U.S. prisoners of war and rival spy networks shadowed each other across the continent. At all times it was a Tango War, in which each side closely shadowed the other's steps. Tickets $200 pesos; seating is limited. Advance tickets available at El Tecolote Bookstore in Todos Santos.

and prevent them from overgrazing vital habitats."

Ketchum notes that the perception of nature changes from one generation to another. In the days when his professor Peter Klimley was becoming famous as Dr. Hammerhead, the fascination was with understanding the behavior of the sharks. For his generation, that witnessed the wholesale destruction of a population in just a few years, the focus has been on habitat conservation. For the generation of students like Edgar Becerril and Frida Lara, the focus is on the ecotourism value of sharks as a way to protect them. The students, along with Ketchum, are already in discussions with fishing communities across Baja California Sur about the possibilities of shark tourism. They are keen.

James Curtiss, owner of The Cortez Club, a dive shop that has been operating out of La Paz for over 20 years, is a leader in the drive for more and better ecotourism opportunities related to sharks, most particularly hammerheads. "Educating divers about sharks and their role in the ocean is the most important thing we can do to protect the Gulf of California ecosystem," notes Curtiss. "Sharks, the top of the food chain, must survive for a healthy ocean." Curtiss is optimistic about the future of sharks in the Gulf of California. "The movement of the hammerheads at El Bajo has always been cyclical, but now the hammerheads are coming back in real numbers, and this summer we had days in which we saw dozens. The waters of the Gulf of California are incredibly rich in nutrients and, as with the whale sharks in the Bay of La Paz, we're seeing lots of juveniles because the adults are breeding and giving birth here. Ecotourism is the key to their protection and continued resurgence." Dr. Galván-Magaña has noted the turnaround for sharks as well. "We are excited to see that in the last four years the sharks are once again returning to the Gulf of California." Have we turned the corner on the age of foolishness?

On the La Paz malecón there is an iconic statue of Jacques Cousteau happily gazing upon his beloved "Aquarium of the World." With Ketchum, Galván, Hoyos-Padillo, Becerril, Lara and the other "shark men and women" of Pelagios Kakunjá on the job, he has every reason to be joyous; the age of wisdom is returning, and hopefully shark parks throughout the Gulf of California will soon contribute to the tale of one large, healthy shark habitat from the Gulf of California down to the Revillagigedos. For our ocean ecosystems, it could be the best of times, once again.

Todos Santos Eco Adventures (TOSEA) provides visitors with opportunities to explore, celebrate, and help conserve the magnificently diverse ecosystems of Baja with whale and bird-watching trips in the Pacific lagoons; treks and ranchero culture programs in the Sierra la Laguna mountains; Sea Turtle Camp and surfing surfaris on the Pacific coast; and kayaking, "glamping," and whale shark and sea lion adventures in the Sea of Cortez. www.TOSEA.net. Tiburones por año. Según Edgar Becerril, estudiante de doctorado en CICIMAR y Pelagios Kakunjá, los tiburones traen equilibrio al océano. "Los tiburones son una especie clave, lo que significa que, si se eliminan del océano, las complejas redes alimenticias del ecosistema oceánico podrían colapsar. Los tiburones evitan que otras especies que son sus presas se reproduzcan demasiado y causen daños al ecosistema. También mantienen a las poblaciones de peces más sanas al eliminar a los individuos más viejos y los enfermos." SharkSavers, un programa de WildAid, está de acuerdo, señalando: "Varios estudios científicos demuestran que el agotamiento de los tiburones provoca la pérdida de especies de peces y mariscos comercialmente importantes en los eslabones por debajo de ellos en la cadena trófica, incluidas pesquerías de especies clave como el atún. Además, a través de la intimidación, los tiburones regulan el comportamiento de especies presa, y evitan que provoquen sobrepastoreo de hábitats vitales."

Ketchum nota que la percepción de la naturaleza cambia de una generación a otra. En los días en que su profesor Peter Klimley se estaba haciendo famoso como el Dr. Tiburón martillo, la fascinación era entender el comportamiento de los tiburones. Para su generación, que fue testigo de la destrucción total de una población en tan solo unos años, la atención se ha centrado en la conservación del hábitat. Para la generación de estudiantes como Edgar Becerril y Frida Lara, la atención se centra en el valor del ecoturismo de los tiburones como una forma de protegerlos. Los estudiantes, junto con Ketchum, ya están en conversaciones con las comunidades pesqueras de Baja California Sur sobre las posibilidades del turismo de tiburones. Ellos están entusiasmados.

James Curtiss, propietario del Cortez Club, un centro de buceo que ha estado operando desde La Paz durante más de 20 años, es un líder en la búsqueda de más y mejores oportunidades de ecoturismo relacionadas con los tiburones, especialmente con los tiburones martillo. "Educar a los buzos sobre los tiburones y su papel en el océano es lo más importante que podemos hacer para proteger el ecosistema del Golfo de California," señala Curtiss. "Los tiburones, en el ápice de la cadena alimenticia, deben sobrevivir para tener un océano saludable." Curtiss es optimista sobre el futuro de los tiburones en el Golfo de California. "El movimiento de los tiburones martillo en El Bajo siempre ha sido cíclico, pero ahora están regresando en números reales, y este verano tuvimos días en los que pudimos ver docenas de ellos. Las aguas del Golfo de California son increíblemente ricas en nutrientes y, al igual que con los tiburones ballena en la Bahía de La Paz, estamos viendo muchos juveniles porque los adultos se están reproduciendo y dando a luz aquí. El ecoturismo es la clave para su protección y su continuo resurgimiento." El Dr. Galván-Magaña también ha notado el cambio en los tiburones. "Estamos emocionados de ver que en los últimos cuatro años los tiburones regresan una vez más al Golfo de California." ¿Será que estamos dando vuelta a la esquina en la era de la necesidad?

En el malecón de La Paz hay una estatua icónica de Jacques Cousteau mirando alegremente a su amado "Acuario del Mundo." Con Ketchum, Galván, Hoyos-Padillo, Becerril, Lara y los otros "hombres y mujeres tiburón" de Pelagios Kakunjá trabajando, él tiene todas las razones para estar alegre. La era de la sabiduría está regresando, y esperamos que los parques de tiburones en todo el Golfo de California pronto contribuyan a la historia de un hábitat de tiburones grande y saludable, desde el Golfo de California hasta Revillagigedo. Para nuestros ecosistemas oceánicos, podría ser el mejor de los tiempos, una vez más.

El Centro Educativo La Palapa alberga también el edificio Puente para clases de inglés y la biblioteca infantil; El tercer componente del centro es la biblioteca bilingüe más grande en Baja California Sur, Biblioteca Elena Poniatowska.

Gracias a todas las generosas donaciones realizadas durante los últimos 15 años, La Sociedad de La Palapa ha otorgado casi 900 becas completas y parciales a estudiantes de buen promedio y necesidad económica a nivel secundaria, bachillerato y universitario, y ofrece programas que llegan a más de 200 niños cada año.

Y está funcionando. La alumna de La Palapa, Martha Elizabeth Pérez Díaz, graduada de la universidad con un título de maestra, se convirtió en directora de la Escuela Elodia Agramont Mendoza en El Pescadero. Lidia López, quien se graduó con un título en arquitectura, se convirtió en la gerente de proyecto para la construcción del Centro Educativo La Palapa.

David C, alumno de secundaria, dijo el día de su graduación: "Esto me ayuda a comenzar mis sueños. Gracias... ¡Quiero poner al mundo de cabeza!"

Estas oportunidades educativas ofrecen una vida de oportunidades y un mejor futuro para los niños y sus familias en nuestra comunidad. Usted también puede convertirse en parte de este legado y ayudar a financiar la Sociedad de La Palapa de Todos Santos, AC. Para participar como donador y para saber más sobre nuestra organización, lo invitamos a visitar nuestra página en www.palapasociety.org

We'd just met at the airport and were already talking like old friends about our writing hopes and goals (and fears) on the drive up the coast to Todos Santos.

The instructors were top-notch and generous with their time. They cared. Better writing was always more important than ego. And the notes they gave on my work are still the ones that I refer back to when I get stuck.

The other attendees are the kind of people you're lucky to meet. Early on we all wanted the best for each other's work. There's this vibe that happens in a great workshop, I think, where you get as excited to hear what someone else has revised as you are about sharing your own changes.

In my experience with the Todos Santos Writers Workshop, you get more than you hoped for. You may also get the windshield wipers stolen on your rental car, but honestly—you won't care.

IVONNE BENÍTEZ

When I say I started writing, I am not referring to a system or an organized method to become a writer (if there is one), but I rather refer to the endless search for motivation. I learned to look at things and beings with different eyes, to listen with other ears, and to understand, at last, that it did not matter too much where I came from or where I was going. I knew I was there and that I had to move forward.

I write to exist.

I write because I am different.

I write to be different.

I write because I am afraid.

I write to defeat my fears.

I write to be happy.

I write to make others happy.

I write to love.

I write to seduce.

I write to ask forgiveness and to be forgiven.

I write to lie.

I write to become someone.

I write to make money.

I write because I like writing.

I write because someone asks me to write.

I write because I am vain.

I write to be remembered.

I write to remember others.

I write to honor my loved ones.

I write because the Todos Santos Writers Workshop gave me the inspiration, the tools, the community of writers and tutors and friends, a writers' family, and the motivation to never stop writing.
